

From AGR's Research Desk

Forecasting market growth and the recency effect

By Arun Jethmalani, Founder, ValueNotes
(ValueNotes is now part of AGR)

For businesses of all kinds, yesterday's success is history. What matters is the future.

Read More

Stay ahead of the curve with Comp-Intel

Unlock real-time, AI-powered insights that transform your decision-making. Comp-Intel automates the collection, analysis, and curation of market data from trusted sources, giving you a 360° view of competitor moves, market trends, and industry shifts.

- Fast & Accurate: Get insights in hours, not weeks.
- Customizable: Tailored content that meets your specific needs.
- Cost-Effective: Cutting-edge intelligence without the heavy research costs.

Empower your business with the most efficient, comprehensive, and secure solution for staying ahead in today's competitive landscape.

Connect with Ankur
(ankur@agrknowledge.com) to try the platform!

Know more...

Fentanyl or Sertraline? Time to make choices

Divesh Khemani, Vice President, AGR Knowledge Services warns the Indian pharmaceutical industry that it needs to make the right choices if it is not to be clubbed with those producing the wrong kinds of drugs. He also calls for greater interaction between Government and industry to fast forward the process

To know more Click here

Missing link: Quick Commerce in India - Amazon and Walmart left behind

Yes, the phenomenon of quick commerce in India is real and staggering. The last few months have seen lightning-speed instant delivery players pop brightly in the retail landscape. Some are offshoots of food delivery giants, some are new to the party, and some are about to jump in the pool.

Nonetheless, the suddenly surging QC industry is a rabbit-hole worth sliding into. How are these apps teleporting stuff to doorsteps in a blink? And will they stick around?

Do read what our colleague, Subra (Subramaniam Ramanathan), had to say about India's quick services sector in an article published in heise online, a leading high-tech news service in Germany

Read more

Stay in touch.... we'd love to hear from you!